AN OBJECTION CONSIDERED.

EDITOR STAR:—I heartily agree with your statement that the Queen ought not to have been permitted to remain on this ground; but I doubt the wisdom of sending her away now to become a mischief-maker abroad. Should she go to the United States, as probably she would, what is to hinder her from raising public sentiment there in favor of her return to the throne? We Americans, unfortunately, rather take to royalty on its travels. JONES.

The Americans have a democratic curiosity to see royal persons, but unless the latter are reigning sovereigns or princes with whose people it is desirable to be on friendly terms, they do not treat them with much seriousness. It is true that Kalakaua awoke some semblance of enthusiasm in the United States, but that was because he was in power in a country with which the American merchants did a large and profitable business. Had he journeyed as an exiled pretender, he would have had no attention from official bodies and would, after the curiosity to see him had been appeased, have dropped out of sight almost as completely as Louis Napoleon Bonaparte did when, after his escape from Ham, he became a tall chandler in Hoboken. No doubt, in Liliuokalani's case, there would be the usual long write ups in the press, the usual crowd of sightseers at the depots and the customary attempt of the codfish aristocracy to make her royal pedigree—such as it is—a tail for the social kite; but all this could have no political effect. The spectacle of a venerable "cullud" woman on the rampage for a crown would create such irresistible mirth among the irreverent Yankees as to end, forever and a day, all hope of restoration by American sympathy. The newspaper paragrapher would be at his best in such a presence and the people would very soon come to ask themselves how it was that an American colony had so long endured the rule of one whose appearance and character must have conveyed to it such a pressing invitation to be rebellious. In two months the ex-Queen would be forgotten and the universal Yankee nation would be amusing itself with the next fad.

If the ex-Queen should go to England or France all the better. There she would enlist very little attention at all, and would rank somewhere below Eugenie and the Spanish Isabella—regard for the latter of whom was soon reduced to a point where her name served as a rhyme in the popular street songs of the day, to "gingham umbrella."

No, it need not be feared that the ex-Queen could become a dangerous mischief-maker abroad; but she might easily become one here.

A BALLOT TEST.

It has been the policy of the royalist papers from the start to question the sincerity of those who favor suffrage for the natives under annexation to the United States. Time and again those journals have said that the STAR, in advising that concession, was merely doing so for political effect, and that those who fell in with the idea intended to use the suffrage as a stalking horse to annexation and would turn the animal out to graze in barren pastures afterwards. No epithet has been too coarse for the ex-Queen's organs to bestow upon those who were behind the plan to give native Hawaiians a fair show at the ballot-box.

It is rather strange, if the royalist sheets meant what they said, that they have never tried to test the matter in a practical way. It would have been easy enough for the natives to have got up a petition asking for annexation with the suffrage, and after signing it, have presented it for the signatures of those who, on the annexationist side, have been pledging themselves to support a suffrage movement. To our mind such a test of sincerity would have been rather conclusive, and we have no doubt as to its result. We believe that any general native movement for union with America on a ballot basis could not fail of the support of all who have been talking up suffrage since that compromise between what was at first hastily proposed, and what native Hawaiians had the right to ask for, was suggested and advised.

THERE are few better forms of advertising than that which the natural phenomena of these islands will have at the World's Fair from the colossal picture of Kilauea. The art of the cycloromants is something beyond the reach of the panorama painters, and when applied to such a vision as "The House of Fire," will be certain to rouse an ambition among those who see the picture to visit the volcano itself and breathe the fumes and feel the heat of that infernal fastness. When the Fair is over we shall look for a throng of Kilauea-bound tourists.

If the President attended to the appointment of a minister to succeed Mr. Stevens on his return from the World's Fair opening, to-morrow's mail may possibly bring the new incumbent's name. It is observable that no effort on anybody's part to secure the post has been noticed by the press, a fact which would seem to disclose a belief among the great mass of Democratic office-seekers that annexation is too close at hand to make the Hawaiian ministerial game worth the candle.

The departure of the Naniwa to-morrow may be looked upon as an indication that the Japanese Emperor feels sure of a future stable government here, by which the interests of his subjects will be cared for and protected. If there were any uncertainty on that point the Naniwa, we think, would stay. It would not be at all surprising if some disclosures of American policy to the Japanese Minister at Washington had prompted this unexpected naval move.

MANILLA rope is but one of a great variety of fabrics the material for which will grow in the soil and climate of these Islands. It is absurd for any one to say that Hawaii's dependence is upon sugar alone when so many other things, for which there is a good market, might be raised and prepared for export here. The Islands are full of the latent force of diversified industries.

It is plain that there is no division of sentiment in Japan upon the question of annexing these islands to that country. The alert people over there know a good thing when they see it, and have managed to set a fine example of perspicacity to some of the "outside barbarians." It is a pity that a few of Japan's fads in politics are not as popular in America as are some of its new wrinkles in art and floriculture.

The gentlemen of the Naniwa—both officers and men—will not fail of a welcome should it ever again fall to their peaceful lot to come into a Hawaiian port. Saying nothing of political views, few ships' companies have ever made a better impression here for courtesy, refinement and self-respect than that of Captain Togo's cruiser. The STAR wishes the Naniwa a pleasant voyage home.

THE Fourth of July should be made this year the occasion of a great American demonstration at Honolulu to which the people of all the islands ought to be invited.

"Up to date," remarks the Bulletin sadly, "the P. G. have passed thirty-five acts or more." And the Bulletin doesn't get any of them to print. Hence these tears.

SHOULD GET UNDER SHELTER.

Annexation the Only Hope of the Wasting Hawaiian Race.

EDITOR STAR:—The claim of the wasted and feeble race of Hawaiian aborigines to hold sovereign rule in these Islands is one most injurious to all parties concerned. What every inhabitant of Hawaii most needs politically is able and honest government, which the native is notably incompetent to supply. And no class really are more injured by the past monarchical system than the Hawaiians themselves.

In estimating the condition of the native people, a significant fact is that no true native is to be found at the head of any important business enterprise whatever. There has never been among them a master house or ship builder, a merchant, a master of a foreign-bound vessel, or a successful occupant of any responsible business position. Even the half-whites rarely attain any business promotion. These people, especially the half-whites, are not so entirely lacking in good capacity. For education, the native has the amplest opportunity.

The chief reason of the Hawaiians' failure seems to be that the one great and tempting avenue to promotion and distinction has always been to become royal parasites and participants in royal debaucheries. Scarcely any natives of parts and capacity have escaped the ruin of this snare. The hope of royal favor has always discouraged honest application and strenuous effort. It has systematically sapped the manhood of the Hawaiian people. The abolition of the monarchy not only puts an end to the royal fostering of debauchery in the hulas and boat-house and palace orgies. It not only abates the royal culture of kahuna sorcery, it also lifts the native out of that most false and injurious position which he has occupied as the heir of political supremacy, and therefore exempt from those necessities of character, conduct and unremitting exertion which alone can develop manhood. Put the Hawaiian on his mettle and something may yet be made of him.

It has been for many years an obvious fact that the sovereignty of the native was absolutely incompatible with progressive civilization or stable government. From the necessity of the case, the 22,000 whites were certain at the first break, to assume the direction of affairs. In the natural course of things what chance had the comparatively weak and ignorant native for keeping equal rights when the white man imperiously asserted himself, as it is the nature of the Anglo-Saxon to do? Manifestly, I speak as the earnest and considerate friend of the Hawaiian—his only hope is to get in all haste under the protection of the American Constitution which guarantees equal rights to all the people. If America should refuse annexation, the independent government that will come instead will have no place for weak constituents. It will undoubtedly have to make itself strong, and I see no prospect for the Hawaiian to share in it. The only true or intelligent advocates of native rights and privileges are those who point the Hawaiian to annexation as his only safe shelter.

With fertile areas capable of feeding 500,000 people; with already a population of 100,000, nearly three the number of the aborigines; with an overflow of Anglo-Saxons ready to pour in and fill our charming paradise, it is most hopeless to expect that the onward push of American civilization westward into the Pacific will any longer be arrested by the obsolete claim of this wasted remnant of ancient Hawaii to rule all the new and strong inhabitants. What these poor people have to do—I speak as their most earnest friend—is to get under shelter as speedily as may be, thanking God that America is so friendly to them. S. E. BISHOP.
